According to John MacDonald, AIA, the principal and owner of Morehouse MacDonald and Associates, St Kitts in the Caribbean is beautiful – volcanic, lush in parts, arid and wind-scorched in others and relatively underdeveloped. The history of St. Kitts is a fascinating blend of pirates, European control, war and eventual independence. The architecture, like its people, is whimsical yet enduring, and there is lots of local stone (called Nevis stone). It's hard to build a home there. But so worth it.
