TUMBLE CREEK AT SUNCADIA

Cle Elum, Wash.

The last ice age left an indelible imprint on Washington's upper Kittitas region. Massive glaciers carved soaring peaks and valleys, forming the towering Cascade Mountains. Eleven-thousand years later, on 6,400 acres of forested mountain land on the range's sunny, eastern slopes, the residential resort community of Suncadia offers a timeless escape for families; tucked inside the resort is the exclusive enclave called Tumble Creek.

A cloistered, low-density mountain community, Tumble Creek offers world-class amenities surrounded by old-growth forests, fresh streams, and tranquil lakes. For golfers, Tom Doak's masterpiece, carefully sculpted into the landscape, is pure delight. Tee to green, it's the perfect member course, one you'll never tire of playing and is always in fabulous shape. Tumble Creek members also enjoy amenities at Suncadia, including the spa, swim and fitness center, and its two courses: the Arnold Palmer-designed Prospector and the family-friendly Rope Rider. When golf season ends, snow season brings snowshoeing, Nordic trails, tubing, and sledding.

In a land that is stunningly pristine, preservation is a top priority. Everything from design-review guidelines to the clubhouse carefully preserve the natural surroundings. The 1,200-acre Cle Elum River corridor, plus thousands more acres, are protected by the Kittitas Conservation Trust, ensuring the surroundings will forever remain as nature intended.

Rather than a traditional large clubhouse, the community opted for a three-building encampment that feels like an extension of home, perfect for a club where all memberships are family memberships. The recently completed Great House offers a dynamic array of dining options, recreational activities, and special features for families, including two bowling lanes.

Tumble Creek provides a depth of choice in homes and homesites—traditional golf, interior wooded, lakefront, and mountain views. While only about 20 of the original homesites are still available, another 80 are coming to market in Spring 2022. This destination community where the sun shines 250 days a year is just 80 miles from the heart of Seattle. But its unspoiled grandeur, private setting, and luxurious amenities make it feel worlds apart.
